The Kitimat River during the year

Coastal micro streams we fish out of Kitimat, Skeena and Nass area, access by Jet boat or helicopter, please contact us for helicopter rates.

JANUARY – FEBRUARY: Fishing for cutthroat and Dolly Varden is usually good during these cold winter months. The first Steelheads show up on the Kitimat River system, heading up to the tributaries. Due to the winter weather, the river will generally be low and clear. Small flies, lures, spinners, and bait are all worth trying when fishing for trout.

MARCH – MAY: Steelhead fishing usually begins in March on the Kitimat River. Silver chrome monster steelhead-strain rainbows will leave anglers breathless as they travel upstream only a couple of feet away from the shore line. Although success can be irregular in this month, it gradually improves late in March and through April. Late April experiences the first small run on chinooks, good runs of steelhead entering the river, with many good-sized fish taken at this time. The run of steelhead peaks at the beginning of May and remains strong until the middle of the month. Only Hatchery clipped steelhead may be retained.

JUNE: Although a few chinook salmon enter the river in late May, June and July is the prime time to target the lower tidal section. This section is approximately 2.5 miles long before the Kitimat River runs into the Kitimat Arm. Success on the upper river system can vary during the first two weeks of the month. Chinook fishing improves in the third week of June and usually continues until the end of the month. The river is higher now than earlier in the year and can rise very quickly with snow melt if temperatures rise.

JULY: With many of the fish entering the river on each high tide the lower tidal section is outstanding and many anglers experience 10-20 hook up's with silver chrome monster chinooks during a tide change. The run of chinook peaks during the first week of July. Fishing for chinook is very good throughout the month of July, but dark fish start showing up in catches after the middle of the month. Many pink and chum salmon are found in the river in July. Late in the month the occasional early coho are caught. The river will tend to be fishable during July, but is still subject to fluctuations due to snow melt or rain. To fish for chinooks can be highly productive.

AUGUST: Chinook fish as all but ended, but the odd chinook can still be caught. Coho fishing is staggered until the middle of the month, when the first good runs begin entering the river. Fishing improves steadily towards the end of August and the chances of catching coho are very good during the last week of August. The Kitimat River is generally low and clear throughout the month. Good rainfalls later in the month will raise the river and bring in fresh runs of coho with every high tide. The fishing will be the best when the river begins to drop and clear after a period of rain.

SEPTEMBER: The coho run peaks in the Kitimat River at the beginning of the month fishing for these salmon remains excellent until the middle of September. Success is still prominent towards the end of the month, but many of the coho are starting to darken in colour. A heavy rain at the end of September will raise the water level and many of the coho will leave the main river and head up their spawning tributaries. The river is generally clear throughout most of this month.

OCTOBER: If the heavy fall rains have started, then coho can still be caught in the main river. Most of the coho are now dark, but the occasional silver one can still be taken. Trout fishing is still very good in October, but heavy rains will muddy the river and make fishing difficult.

NOVEMBER – DECEMBER: Trout fishing remains good during these months and throughout the entire year. There is still a slight chance to catch a coho. The river is usually fairly low and clean.

JANUARY – MARCH: The Douglas Channel and surrounding waters are frequented by north off-shore winds during this period. Although the winter fishing for spring salmon is quite good, fishing is restricted near the head of the inlet. The winter feeding spring salmon range in weight from three to twelve pounds.

MARCH – JUNE: March starts our busy season as the winter northerlies have now swung to southerlies. The winter spring salmon are now fairly abundant and mixed with the incoming seasonal spring spawners and are heading for rivers. These returning fish can be as large as 75 pounds.

JUNE – SEPTEMBER: During these months, fishing can take place in numerous areas. Fishing for chum, pink, coho and chinook can be phenomenal. At times our sportsmen will venture anywhere within a 135 km radius of Kitimat's marinas. With the coming of coho and sockeye salmon, each year around the beginning of July, you will find the fishing enthusiast working the outer coast. As these silver beauties work their way to spawn, the angler will be just behind. Pink and chum salmon are basically a commercially caught salmon. Coho salmon are a very active, hard fighting salmon with a weight range from three to 30 pounds.

SEPTEMBER – DECEMBER: After September and as the weather cools and the winter winds start, we move into a time when our saltwater sportsmen tend to work the head end of the Douglas Channel for winter spring salmon as our area is one of the west coast's prime feeding areas. Jumbo prawn fishing is a nice alternative during most winter months.

Dala & Kildala River

Dala-Kildala Rivers Estuaries Park is located at the east end of Kildala Arm, along the east side of Douglas Channel, approximately 15 km southeast of Kitimaat Village. Access is by helicopter and boat only. The park protects provincially significant and productive tidal wetlands, river estuaries, fish and wildlife habitat, salmon streams and Grizzly Bear habitat, Park size 741 ha. History - Dala-Kildala Rivers Estuaries Park was designated as a Park on May 20, 2004, following recommendations from the Kalum Land and Resource Management Plan.

Wildlife: Dala-Kildala Rivers Estuaries Park protects a Nationally significant over-wintering and migration staging site for migratory bird species. The park includes the habitat of such bird species as Trumpeter Swan, Great Blue Heron, Western Grebe, Red-Breasted Merganser and Canada Goose. The park also protects important Grizzly Bear habitat and the Dala and Kildala Rivers support significant runs of Pink and Chum Salmon, with minor runs of Coho and Chinook Salmon.

Wildlife Viewing: The estuaries in this park can provide wildlife viewing opportunities for waterfowl, Grizzly bears, Black-tailed deer and sometimes wolves. Also at times, Humpback and Killer Whales can be seen in the marine waters of Kildala Arm.

We offer full guided day trips and 1 – 3 days guided Ocean & River fishing expeditions out of Kitimat, these are all inclusive adventure packages to the Dala & Kildala River.

Up to 4 guest $ 1400, additional guest $ 150, max. 6 guest per boat

Gilltoeyes River

Foch-Gilltoeyes Park and Protected Area located roughly 33 km southwest of Kitimat on the west side of the Douglas Channel and protects 61,183 hectares of rugged coastal and mountainous terrain, from sea level to alpine tundra. The park is nestled in the Coast Mountain Range on the north side of the Douglas Channel and it envelops a diversity of landscapes and features including pristine freshwater drainages, bordered by steep rocky slopes covered with old-growth forests, numerous waterfalls, tidal estuaries, unique tidal narrows, and a windswept coastline. Snow-covered peaks, glacial tarns, cirque basins, and receding glaciers cap the park. In conjunction with Gitnadoiks River Park and Protected Area to the north, Foch-Gilltoeyes completes a contiguous protected area corridor between the Douglas Channel and the Skeena River.

History: Foch-Gilltoeyes was designated as a Class A provincial Park on May 20, 2004 following recommendations from the Kalum Land and Resource Management Plan. The Protected Area portion was designated a year later on March 22, 2005. Drum Lummon Mines and Paisley Point Mines established mineral claims north of Drumlummon Bay in the early 1920's for extraction of copper, gold and silver. Some mineral claims still exist in this area (adjacent to the north side of the Protected Area) but are excluded from the Park.

Cultural Heritage: Foch-Gilltoeyes contains part of a historical First Nations travel route between the Douglas Channel and the Skeena River (the remainder of the route is in Gitnadoiks River Park).

Conservation: Foch Lagoon is one of the largest and most remote lagoons on the BC coast. It includes a highly productive and unique tidal narrows at its entranceway. Because of the heavy tide influence in the narrows the oceanic productivity in this area is very high compared to the rest of the Douglas Channel. The kelp beds that are found in this area support nurseries for a wide array of sea life.

Wildlife: Foch – Gilltoeyes protects a regionally significant estuary complex at the north end of the Gilltoeyes Inlet. The Gilltoeyes Creek and Peechugh Creek estuary is notable for its well-developed inter-tidal flats and relatively under-developed mud flats. Salt-water marsh and meadow communities dominate the inter-tidal flats. The estuary has very high wildlife values, particularly over-wintering habitat for the Blue-listed Trumpeter Swan, Barrow's Goldeneye, Harlequin Duck, Surf Scoter, Long-tailed duck and Western Grebe.

We offer full guided day trips and 1 – 3 days guided Ocean & River fishing expeditions out of Kitimat, these are all inclusive adventure packages to the Foch & Gilltoeyes river.

Kemano River

Kemano is a settlement situated 75 km (47 mi) southeast of Kitimat in the province of British Columbia in Canada. It was built to service a hydroelectric power station, built to provide energy for Alcan to smelt aluminium (aluminum) from its ore. The powerhouse is built 427 m (1,400 ft) inside the base of Mt Dubose in a blasted cavern. It produces 896 MW of power from its eight generators, each of which has a capacity of 112MW. The plant comprises a 16 km (10 mi) tunnel, the width of a two-lane highway, drilled and blasted through the coastal mountains to carry water to the penstocks of the Kemano powerhouse. The water plunges 800 m (2,600 ft) to drive the generators. The power transmission lines travel 82 km (51 mi) from Kemano to Kitimat across some of the most rugged mountain territory in British Columbia, along the Kildala Pass, about 1,500 m (5,000 ft) above sea-level. The first Kemano Project, known as Kemano I, resulted in the flooding of 120,000 acres (490 km²) of the Nechako Reservoir, within Cheslatta territory. This reputedly removed approximately 75% of the flow of the Nechako which is or was an important salmon river. Expansion on the project, known as Kemano II, has been contested in the Canadian courts by members of the Cheslatta Carrier Nation with a group of Elders who have filed a Statement of Claim with the Supreme Court of British Columbia. Kemano itself is a name for a tribal subdivision of the Hanaksiala, part of the Haisla group, and was a community in its own right after many of the coastal tribes withdrew during the influx of colonists post-1780, to remove themselves from the threat of diseases and the alien culture. Kemano Indian Reserve No. 17 is located at the site of the Henaksiala village, though most Haisla in the region today live at Kitimaat Village, near Kitimat. The company town of Kemano was originally built in the 1950s and is home to a thriving small community, featuring a guesthouse, a shop which sold everything from candy to guns to socks to hats, a golf course and a church. It eventually closed its doors as a community in 2000, the residents were moved out, and the majority of houses (including the school) were burnt down as a training exercise for selected fire departments from all of BC. The plant still exists and is operational on a shift system.

We offer full guided day trips and 1 – 3 days guided Ocean & River fishing expeditions out of Kitimat, these are all inclusive adventure packages to the Kemano River.

Kitlope River

Up to 4 guest $ 1800, additional guest $ 150, max. 6 guest per boat

This park encompasses the world's largest intact coastal temperate rainforest. This unique rainforest has old-growth trees over 800 years old. The Kitlope valley is an important habitat for marbled murrelets, bald eagles, moose, grizzly, black bear, wolf and waterfowl. The Kitlope valley lies within the traditional territory of the Haisla First Nation, based out of Kitamaat Village. It takes a few hours to travel to the Kitlope by boat from Kitimat. The best time to visit the area is in July and August, when the marine conditions and the weather are at their best. Along the way visitors can do some fishing; visit Weewanie or Shearwater Hot Springs; watch for whales, seals, eagles, mountain goats, and bears; and view the wonderful waterfalls, tall granite cliffs, and hanging glaciers along Gardner Canal. Visitors arriving in larger vessels can anchor just outside the estuary area (deeper water) and then take a smaller boat (jet boats are best) up the Kitlope River to Kitlope Lake. Park Size: 321,120 hectares. The park is located at the end of the Gardner Canal, on British Columbia's central coast, approximately 50 km northwest of Bella Coola and 120 km southeast of Kitimat. The area is accessed by boat to the end of the Gardner Canal. The area is accessed by boat and aircraft only. Visitors should be experienced in ocean navigation and wilderness survival. Visitors can use jet boats to access Kitlope Lake and Kitlope River systems.

History: In 1994 the West Fraser Timber Company relinquished all rights to harvesting in the Kitlope area without consideration or compensation from the B.C. Government. The park was proposed with cooperation between the Haisla Nation and the B.C. Government. It protects the largest intact coastal temperate rainforest in the world. The Kitlope area encompasses a rich diversity of natural and cultural heritage values.

Cultural Heritage: The Kitlope Valley lies within the traditional territory of the Haisla Nation. Known to the Haisla as „Hushuwashdu“ or „Source of the milky blue water“, the Kitlope area is a focus of native lore and native stories such as „The Man Who Turned to Stone“. The Kitlope Valley also has significant archaeological site potential. The Haisla have used the Kitlope area for the harvesting of plants, animals and fish including salmon and oolichan.

Conservation: The area encompasses the world's largest intact coastal temperate rainforest. This unique rainforest has old-growth trees over 800 years old. The Kitlope watershed provides a large intact diversity of wildlife and fish habitats, ranging from estuaries, lakes, rich flood plains, steep side slopes and alpine area.

Wildlife: The Kitlope Valley is an important habitat for Marbled Murrelets, Bald Eagles, moose, mountain goats, grizzly bear, black bear and waterfowl. A variety of waterfowl and birds can also be found throughout the Kitlope watershed. All five species of pacific salmon, herring, and oolichan spawn throughout the many rivers and creeks.

We offer full guided day trips and 1-3 days guided Ocean & River fishing expeditions out of Kitimat, these are all inclusive adventure packages to the Kitlope River.

Please contact us for more detailed information for those outstanding wilderness trip.

We use the best G-Loomis rods and Shimano Calcutter 700 B multi-roles with 0.25 – 0.30 Maxima Ultragreen Monofil lines. At the Kitimat River Estuary we fish the entire season with salmon eggs. Along the Kitimat River we use salmon eggs until the middle of May. The steelheads and salmon in our coastal rivers are particularly strong as they have not yet used up all their energy necessary for their ascent to their spawning grounds. Cutthroat trout, rainbow trout, char and mountain whitefish are a great by-product of the salmon fishing. Frequently we catch all five different species of salmon in one day.

Expect 100% success, service and satisfaction during your dream fishing, hunting or nature holiday with Kingfish Westcoast Adventure Tours Ltd. on the North-West coast of Canada.
